HERIOT-WATT COLLEGE.

This institution, the annual provision for which is to be not less than £4,000, is mainly intended to give thorough scientific, technical, art and commercial instruction, at moderate fees, to students in attendance at evening classes. Day classes for higher training were established in the College in 1888, for mechanical & electrical engineers & manufacturing chemists. There is also a department for technical mycology. In the bursary system, established in connection with the Heriot-Watt College, are included bursaries for (1) "covering the cost of education & books" of students requiring aid in attending the evening classes; & (2) assisting students to carry on their education in the day technical department, or in the University of Edinburgh

There were over 3,721 students (male & female) in attendance at the day & evening classes in session 1905-1906

From 1858 to 1899 the Society held an annual Examination for Certificate & Diploma in Agriculture, winners of the Diploma (F.H.A.S.) being elected Free Life Members of the Society
In 1898 it was resolved by the Royal Agricultural Society of England & the Highland & Agricultural Society of Scotland to discontinue the independent Examinations in Agriculture held by the two Societies, & to institute in their stead a Joint-Examination for a National Diploma in Agriculture (N.D.A.). This Examination is now conducted under the management of the "National Agricultural Examination Board" appointed by the two Societies

VETERINARY DEPARTMENT.

The Society established a veterinary department in 1823, but by an arrangement made with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, the Society's examination ceased in 1881. Holders of the Society's Veterinary Certificate are entitled to become members of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, on payment of certain fees, without being required to undergo any further examination. The number of students who have passed for the Society's certificate is 1,183
Since 1874 the Society has annually voted a number of silver medals for class competition to each of the two veterinary colleges in Edinburgh & to the one in Glasgow
